These beautiful lines focus on the saying, "Failure are stepping stones to success". Every individual who has reached the heights success does have a story of failure experienced in life. One's success can never remain final and similarly one's failure won't be fatal. It does keep changing. Thomas Alva Edison is one such example to the world. He and his staff conducted seventeen thousand experiments which failed before they succeeded in one experiment which enabled them to extract late in substantial quantities from just one variety of plant, which was worth 17,000 failures. Failure is good for one's character and personality. It is a challenging experience. Hardwork beats talent when talent does not work hard. One who comes to a conclusion that success is final and failure is fatal, can never achieve anything without the grit and determination, the spirit and confidence that one needs for success.
