COMPREHENSION

I. Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow

Pure water lacks taste and smell. All living things need water in order to survive. Forty to ninety percent of the weight of all organisms is water. The human body uses water to remove wastes and transport nutrients throughout the body. Ancient philosophers thought of water as a true building block by which all other liquids are measured, until the late eighteenth century when a British chemist by the name of Cavendish made water by using a mixture of hydrogen and oxygen. We now know that water is 2 parts hydrogen, the most abundant element in our universe, and 1 part oxygen, the element that we breathe in order to survive.
